

Discover High Tech...19th Century Style

Experience life during the early years of the Industrial Revolution and dawn of a new era in communications. This 7.5-acre National Historic Landmark site preserves the restored estate of Stephen Vail. See how the first modern communication device in the world was invented. Here, Stephen's son, Alfred Vail, invented the telegraph and launched our modern information age.

At Historic Speedwell you will see the Factory, a National Historic Landmark where Stephen Vail's son, Alfred, worked with Samuel F.B. Morse to perfect the telegraph. It was here on January 11, 1838 where the electromagnetic telegraph was first publicly demonstrated – making Historic Speedwell the "Birthplace of the Telegraph." The Factory Building includes a new, hands-on exhibit about the history of the telegraph at Speedwell. A variety of interactive displays take visitors through the fascinating story of the development of the telegraph and why it all happened at Speedwell! Don't miss it!
